SUBJECT INDEX Volumes 1–25

Veronica H. Long
University of Minnesota, USA

This twenty-five year comprehensive Subject Index of Annals of Tourism Research is intended to contribute to reference works in the field and be a major resource for tourism scholars and social science researchers in general. It is an example of Annals' dedication to nurture and disseminate tourism scholarship. The first comprehensive headword index was done after 10 years of publication of this journal by Nelson Graburn, and Steve Illum in 1983. Five years later, in 1988 a 15 year index was produced by Valene Smith and Carol Cameron. Since then, each volume has featured an index in its fourth issue, compiled by Margaret Swain.

Style. The subject headings in this issue are based on all contents of every issue except Publication Titles (which is a simple listing of new titles) and Calendars. The style of the index is basically the same as initially set forth by Graburn, and Illum. In this 25th anniversary index, similar to the 10th anniversary edition, all “entries are in the form of volume number and page number”. To keep the format concise, “multiple page numbers are not given. Where a subject is the topic of a whole article or is a keyword, the page number refers to the beginning of the article. Where a topic appears as a subentry or an important discussion within an article but is not its major subject, the number refers to the page where the passage first appears”, whether discussed continuously or not. To keep this anniversary index similar to its predecessor, two kinds of cross-reference are used. “Those which say “(see 'x-topic')” refer the reader to another main heading within which all references to the particular topic are included. Other cross-references appear as “(see also 'y-topic'),” and these guide the reader to related topic headings... (Annals 10:583). But one departure from this format is that when a special issue is on one topic or theme, it is listed by volume and issue number in bold, for example, “Antarctica, 21(2).”

Contents. The field of tourism has matured and so has the Annals comprehensive index. Tourism has grown from being a new study area—establishing its basic tenants and justifying its existence—to a multidisciplinary field of investigation. Its development in the social sciences is somewhat reflected by changes made in the way that subject headwords are now organized in this index of Annals first twenty five years.

Methodology. Work on this anniversary index was accomplished in several stages. The first task was to integrate the single year indices from these past 10 years with the 1973-1988 year index. Second, headings were reconfigured as terms were rationalized. Some headwords have been either dismantled or condensed to facilitate index use. An example of this type of change is seen with the old headword definitions: it has been dismantled and the citations listed under their respective headwords. The terms tourist and tourism were used interchangeably but now have mutually exclusive meanings. Thus, the entries for what used to be listed as definition, tourist/tourism were reviewed and are now listed under tourist, definition and tourism, definition, respectively. In another case, with a vast accumulation of work to be expected in a journal focusing on research, another mega-heading, methodology, was created. It incorporates both analytical methods and data collection to indicate research processes. The headword models now lists entries formerly scattered through the index.

The next challenge was to add more cross-referencing to the newly integrated terms. There was a deliberate bias towards "over" cross-referencing with the aim of facilitating use. Fourth, place names were put under their respective countries when appropriate. Some places did not fit under one country so they were put under regional headwords. An example is Niagra Falls which is both in the United States and Canada. It is now listed under North America. Geographical features such as mountain ranges, lakes, seas, and island groups are also indexed. This gives the researcher an immediate view of geographic spread. Beyond these and other similar challenges, the final task was to proofread the entire document. This effort included a search for errors and inconsistencies, with the aim of standardizing the work of various scholars who have contributed to the creation of this landmark indexes.

As language use changes in general and in the field of tourism studies, terminology evolves. This process presents challenges to those creating indexes. Where terms have changed, efforts were made to cross-reference the old and new terms. Citations are listed under terms used by the authors. An example of this is Indians. In North America, many of the aboriginal groups are referred to as Indians or North American Indians, to differentiate them from people of the country India. In recent years, the term Native American has gained popularity. In this index, those citations are listed under North American Indian as well as Native American with cross-references.

In sum, the past twenty-five years have seen formidable development in the field of tourism social science. During this period, the academic field of tourism studies and research has blossomed. This is evidenced by multitudes of books, journals, book series, and electronic bulletin boards being published, as well as university programs, departments, research centers, and extension programs established worldwide. Annals of Tourism Research has been at the forefront of this development. An array of subject headwords listed in this index reflects a spectrum of tourism knowledge after a quarter of a century. As part of this process, Annals index will also continue to change. In spite of, and because of, its morphology, the index stands as a tribute to social technology and the quest for knowledge.

Notes for Index Use. The following points/indicators are intended to clarify and thus to facilitate the use of this index. Headwords refer to an article's subject(s), keyword(s), or content(s), arranged alphabetically. Entries are listed numerically by volume and page numbers. Subject and keyword entries indicate the beginning of the whole article or a special issue and content entries indicate the page on which topic is introduced in an article. Inclusive cross referencing (see x-headword) indicates the headword where all references to the topic are listed. Topical cross referencing (see also-y headword) guides readers to related headwords. Place names are indexed by smallest unit of reference in article, in a standardized order of continent, transnational region, and country. National region and city names are listed under country (such as France, Paris). Geographical features are cross-referenced by place name or type of feature, such as Caribbean (see also island names). No personal names are indexed as main subject headwords.

Acknowledgments—The preparation of this 25th anniversary Subject Index was accomplished with the assistance of Maryann Brent, Valene Smith, and Margaret Swain. Proofreading was assisted by Catharine Beverly, Heather Dolan, Jenny Hansen, Kathi Mason, and Maddalena Romano. Funds were provided by Virginia Commonwealth University for assistants.
